

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Spelling of Names.

EDITORS OF 'THE AUK':—

Dear Sirs:— For some years past I have had official or friendly relations, or both, with three distinguished men who bear the same name. By one—the President of Harvard University—it is written Eliot; by another—a zoölogist, explorer and author of world-wide reputation—Elliot; by the third—an eminent authority and writer on North American birds and mammals, for whom, by the way, it stands as a given name only—Elliott. In writing to one or another of these gentlemen, as I have sometimes had occasion to do, I have often found it necessary to verify my impression as to the precise number of “l”s and “t”s to which he laid claim. This, of course, has given some trouble, but in my simple ignorance of philology it had not occurred to me that the name in question could be “properly” spelled in only one way, and I had even supposed that some family or historical interest or value might attach to and in a way justify its slightly varying forms. These illusions, however, have been utterly dispelled by Mr. Elliot’s recent onslaughts on our unfortunate Canon XL. I have read his argument with a mixture of satisfaction and shame—satisfaction at the beneficent possibilities of correctness and uniformity of spelling which his article suggests, and shame that I, as a member of the Committee could have been so misguided as to vote for a principle which sanctions writing the name of one bird Anthus pensilvanicus and of another Dendroica pensylvanica,—and this despite the fact that in my early youth I actually enjoyed the privileges of that public school education to which Mr. Elliot so feelingly alludes.

Fortunately it is not too late to retrieve my error, and I gladly take this opportunity to pledge the use of what influence I may possess with the Committee towards the elimination of Canon XL in accordance with Mr. Elliot’s views, provided that gentleman will agree to secure and establish a uniform and hence “correct” spelling of the name he bears. That this will be easy enough in the case of our mutual friend Dr. Elliott Coues the latter’s outspoken and cordial support of Mr. Elliot in late numbers of ‘The Osprey’ leaves no reason to doubt, but with the President of Harvard University there may possibly be some difficulty!

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM BREWSTER.

Cambridge, Mass.